Legislation and Policy	Public service values must be at the heart of the National Health Service. High standards of corporate and personal conduct based on a recognition that patients come first, have been a requirement throughout the NHS since its inception. Moreover, since the NHS is publicly funded, it must be accountable to Parliament for the services it provides and for the effective and economical use of taxpayers' money. The Code of Accountability published by the Department of Health / Appointments Commission focuses on the three crucial public service values which must underpin the work of the health service: accountability, probity and openness.
Equality and Diversity	Not applicable
